Introduction

Wills, providing instructions on how and to whom an individual's wealth and assets should be transmitted after their death, form one of the key sources for our study. We collected samples of wills for analysis that were proved at English and Welsh probate courts between the 1850s and the 1930s. There are 5 'cohort' samples of 96 wills – 1856–60, 1876–79, 1899–1902, 1913 and 1933 – creating an overall sample of 480 wills.

For the period prior to 1902, where our data links to additional information about testators taken from death duty records (specifically, IR19 Legacy Duty Residuary Accounts, which provide a detailed break down of a testator's non-landed assets and liabilities; and IR26 Legacy and Succession Death Duty Registers, which offer data to estimate the value of land and real estate holdings and information on when beneficiaries inherited and what they received; both are held at The National Archives), we derived a sample by selecting testate decedents for a series of consecutive years.<sup>1</sup> The reason for doing so was that there were insufficient numbers of Legacy Duty Residuary Accounts in any one particular year to make up a sufficiently large enough sample. Those that we have included represent the total number that survive. The decision to link our wills database to these death duty records was made in order to be understand the nature and type of wealth and assets owned by testators at their death and to establish the value of bequests to individual beneficiaries; it is not possible to achieve this by using the wills themselves.

For the years 1913 and 1933 we selected wills using a random sample drawn from the Probate Calendars held at the Principal Probate Office. No death duty records survive for this group.

Details from all wills were entered into the Wills Database, constructed using Microsoft Access. The following list contains basic information relating to the 480 wills that comprise the Wills Database.
